H-BOMB AND PEACE

Having the hydrogen bomb may not keep us out of war, but we cannot risk not having it. So President Truman has made the fearful yet unavoidable choice. We are going to build a weapon of almost incredible destructive power.

The decision was inevitable because the basic information needed for the making of the H-bomb is well known to our great potential enemy, the Soviet Union. No moral considerations could overrule that fact.

We should understand what we are undertaking. There is no scientific ceiling on the ferocity of this bomb; it could be possibly 1.000 times more powerful than the A-bomb. Harrison Brown, atomic scientist, says the weapon might destroy an area of 300 square miles. Dropped over New York or Chicago, it could kill 2,000,000 people.

By these measures, the A-bomb is now antiquated, though it is less than five years

Of course, most experts do not expect the H-bomb to be built to its maximum. They're talking of a wenpon 10 to 100 times more powerful than the A-bomb. For certain practical limits do exist.

One is the size of the planes that can be constructed to deliver the bomb over a target. It may not be feasible to enlarge bombers much more. Another question is whether plane crews could get safely away from the shock waves produced by a real super-bomb.

Furthermore, despite its name, the proposed new bomb is not actually a hydrogen explosive. Its chief ingredient would be a chemical called tritium, a sort of twin of hydrogen. Tritium is not plentiful. It is found in ordinary water in very minute amounts, and it has been produced synthetically in atomic energy laboratories. But getting enough of it is expected to be the costliest part of the H-bomb project.

Nevertheless our scientists confidently hope they can make an H-bomb within a year. And they doubt the ability of the Russians to match our pace.

It would be a grave mistake, however, for us to pin too much faith on this new device of destruction—frightening as it may be to

A crucial issue, still undecided, is facing the nation's military experts: Is this the best way to spend our defense dollars?

The answer won't be known until the H-bomb project has proceeded far enough to give us an accurate idea how much money and manpower will be involved. Then we will have to measure the bomb's probable worth against other ways of using our resources.

For example, there's a question now whether lightning jet fighter planes may not have the upper hand over even the fastest bombers. If military men decided there was real doubt about our chances of delivering the H-bomb to enemy targets, they might think twice before committing too much money and effort to a highly expensive project.

Furthermore, we cannot rely on this bomb as a substitute for diplomacy. Having it will not justify avoiding the hard work of searching for enduring peace, for a plan to control this and all other destructive weapons.

On the contrary, if we successfully develop the H-bomb it will only increase our responsibility in the tireless quest that will make its use totally unnecessary.

POSTAL RISES

The post office has taken a most antagonistic attitude toward the Hoover report which is simed at making it a business institution, paying, if possible, for itself. Thus far, the only real response of the postmaster general has been to ask for more money, seeking to increase the income of that office by an estimated $130,000,000, mostly by raising the postal rates on second class mail, including maga-

The minority report of the committee on post The minority report of the committee on gostoffice and civil service was signed by Congressmen Harold C. Hagen, Usher L. Burdick, Gardner R. Withrow, H. post office is antiquated and inefficient. It also shows that because of faulty bookkeeping practices, the post office cannot and actually does not know what it is doing. It lacks an adequate method of cost accounting, therefore, the demand for an increase of rates only demonstrates an inability to face problems realistically.

The minority report indicates this in its recommendations:

"(a) Increase efficiency in the Post Office De-partment before using the deficit as a basis for setting rates.

"(b) Provide for the setting of rates for special services by the Post Office Department administratively as recommended by the Hoover Commission report,

"(c) Consider the rates for first-, second-, third-, and fourth-class mail as separate units so that a more careful study can be made of the problems involved by the rate structure recommended,

"(e) Reorganize the Post Office Department's

"(c) Reorganize the Post Office Department's cost-ascertainment system to include such important intangible considerations as relative priority, degree of preferment, and economic value of the several classes of service, which are essential if it is to be used as a tool in conjunction with all of the other factors that go into the operation of the postal establishment. The cost-ascertainment system should not be used as an absolute guide for establishment of postal rates.

Whether the rates are too low, adequate or too high can only be determined by cost accounting after the elimination of waste and inefficiency. If the rates are inadequate, it needs to be ascertained precisely where the loss is.

While it cannot be expected that the post office will take a commercial view of costs, it needs nevertheless to be determined whether throwing nevertheless to be determined whether throwing the full burden of the loss in revenue on nowspapers and magazines will best serve the United States. The Hoover report showed that the post office could reduce its expenditures by about $140, 200,000; yet the post office's answer to this has been not to improve its efficiency but to demand an additional $130,000,000. That is political cynicism gone hog wild, which apparently is the tone of the times.

A department which provides under acts of

A department which provides, under acts of Congress, costly subsidies cannot justify loading ento some industries the cost of subsidizing others. Of course, the fault does not rest entirely with the post office which is bound by acts of Congress. But the post office avoids constructive proposals to Congress, fearful that it will tread on political toes. Therefore, it kites and pyramids, which in business are regarded not only as faulty but unstrial practice. are regarded not only as faulty but unethical prac-

Before Congress permits the raising of any rates, the post office should be made into a modern, efficient, businesslike organization. Then, if it still operates at a loss, rates should be revised on a

UNDERACTIVE THYROID GLAND

While we read much about the overactive thyroid gland (goiter) we do not read or hear much about the underactive thyroid gland. In the overactive thyroid gland individual there is trembling, rapid heartbeat and loss of weight; he is active mentally and physically. With underactive thyroid gland (myxedema) there is no trembling, no rapid heartbeat and some gain in weight. He is underactive mentally and physically.

The treatment for overactivity of thyroid is removal of all or part of the thyroid gland by surgery or X-ray. In underactive thyroid gland, a daily dose of thyroid extract is the treatment.

In many cases of underactive thyroid gland, because the individual is slow or situggish, he is considered a mental case. A certain percentage of these individuals are placed in mental institutions. An editorial in "The Journal of the American Medical Association," quoting Dr. R. Asher in "The British Medical Journal," states that myxedema is one of the ment invariant one of the least known and the most important, one of the least known, and one of the most frequently missed causes of mental tisease--"myxedema madness." Some physicians, while aware of the fact that duliness and poor mem ory are caused by myxedema, do not realize that a true and organic mental disease can occur.

Of 14 patients with myxedema, 10 were admitted to the mental observation wards of the hospital unto the mental observation wards of the hospital under the Lunacy Act. In nine of the 14 patients a dramatic and complete recovery occurred with thyroid treatment, while in two more there was partial improvement and two patients died.

In these 14 patients, there were various forms of mental disease among which were delusions, hallucinations, double personality, and melancholia.

It will certainly be of interest to all physicians

It will certainly be of interest to an physicians to learn that an underactive thyrold gland may be the cause of real mental disease, aside from sluggishness of mind and body. A metabolism test, which is inexpensive, will tell whether the thyroid gland is normal, overactive, or underactive. Golter

Mr Ferrauit won the opening lead of the jack of hearts with the king and then cashed the see of diamonds. Now he played a small spade and finessed the jack.

When it held he led the jack of clubs and when East refused to cover he let it ride. When it held the trick he cashed the balance of his spades, also the king and queen of diamonds. He now played a small heart to the ace and cashed the ace of clubs for his 12th trick.

The purpose of eviction control is to protect tenants against illigal rent boosis or evictions in bad faith while permitting landlords to gain possession of rental units under specified conditions. Hoag explained.

In the 10 months under the present act, the Poughkeepsic office has issued 53 certificates relating to eviction. Most of these have been issued for purchasers seeking to occupy newly purchased homes or owners who wanted to provide housing for members of their immediate families.
